National Partnership for Educational Access Names New Advisory Board Member

Boston – March 2, 2018 – The National Partnership for Educational Access names new Advisory Board Member.

The National Partnership for Educational Access (NPEA) is proud to welcome Annie Reznik, the Executive Director of the Coalition for Access, Affordability, and Success to its Advisory Board. Annie will join our current Board members in serving as an ambassador and champion for NPEA in its mission of connecting the people, practices, and innovations essential for eliminating barriers to educational access and college and career success for underserved students.

“We are thrilled to welcome Annie to the Board. Her experience in higher education, college admissions, and in the field of educational access will contribute to our efforts to ensure underserved students are on the path to and through college and beyond,” said NPEA Executive Director Karin Elliott.

Annie has been an ardent supporter of student success in college for over fifteen years. She leads the Coalition for Access, Affordability, and Success, a group of more than 140 colleges and universities across the U.S. that joined together to increase students' access to higher education. Annie has leadership experience in both college admissions and college counseling. She began her career as an admissions counselor at the University of Maryland and quickly advanced to a supervisory role, directing the freshman review process for over 25,000 applications annually, chairing the admission committee, and supervising a staff of admission counselors.
